The Story of
COLONIAL ANTIQUE

IN the last part of the eighteenth century, between 1760 and 1800, from the shops of some of the better known Colonial Silversmiths, there appeared the pointed spoon. Joseph Loring of Boston is credited with one which appeared in 1785, and Thomas Revere, brother of the famous Patriot and Silversmith, Paul Revere, is known to have produced pointed spoons about 1780. Two of these, with the initials H. C. on the handle are among the rare pieces to be found in the collection of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. WATSON'S COLONIAL ANTIQUE is the authentic reproduction of this famous design, which is even more popular today than when it was first crafted.

The simple and graceful lines of COLONIAL ANTIQUE give it the quiet dignity that many prefer for a lifetime Sterling pattern. The adaptation of the original design by the Silversmiths of Watson Park, to fit modern social requirements, makes COLONIAL ANTIQUE a most desirable all-purpose pattern. The moderate cost of the flat silver and the matching tea and coffee sets, dishes, etc., brings it within the reach of all, and its weight and intrinsic value will make it a treasured heritage of family silver. COLONIAL ANTIQUE hollowware includes many authentic reproductions of rare specimens of the work of better known Colonial artisans, including a series of beautifully proportioned adaptations of the famous bowl crafted by Paul Revere. COLONIAL ANTIQUE offers the unusual combination of a pattern that is of true Colonial conception yet thoroughly modern and smart.
